PREFACE.

IN harmony with the original purpose and plan, this volume is "An historical record of representative men of affairs in Los Angeles and Southern California—combining in one volume the human interest always present in portraits together with the instructive facts of biography." It is with more than ordinary satisfaction that the publishers send this book forth for public appreciation, since they believe that in general scope and in details it more than fulfils the promises made in the prospectus. None will question that the book is a permanent contribution to the history of Los Angeles and Southern California. The fact that the men whose lives form the biographical basis of the work are foremost representatives of city, state and nation makes the facts and illustrations herein contained a historical monument which will be prized even more by later generations than by the present. As regards this element of the book's value, it is only necessary to suggest how much we would value a similar collection of portraits of the men who made the history of our nation one hundred years ago.

So much may be said of the salient purposes and contents of the work. Of the mechanical and artistic execution, the most cursory examination will prove its superiority and excellence. The majority of the portraits are recent, the photographs having been taken expressly for reproduction in this volume, a process to which both engraver and printer have lent their highest skill. Durability and elegance have been constant ideals in the making of the volume, a permanent and handsome dress being considered a proper adornment to worthy contents. Utmost care has been employed to secure accuracy in the personal records, typewritten copies and prints of the matter intended for publication having been submitted at least once to the persons concerned, and unusual diligence has been exercised in every detail.

FOREWORD.

YOU sit on the western piazza and watch the sun go down. You linger long, held by the after-glow that tints the heavens like the heart of a shell. A crescent of silver gleams in the purpling skies. A star shines out below the young moon. In orderly splendor the glittering constellations flame out in their march across the fields of night. Shadows of pine and palm whisper softly under the kisses of the fragrant winds. Incense of rose and heliotrope mingle with the odor of the orange-trees. The silence and star-shine and perfume is prayer and praise. Your soul worships at the shrine of perfect nature. An unseen chalice of melody is tilted somewhere in the upper darkness—a ripple of music, clear and sweet, spilled from its heart of rapture, runs down through the shadows and fragrance—a mocking bird is singing his hymn to the night. Your soul overflows with a sense of beauty, and joy, and peace. It is not a "Mid-summer Night's Dream." Such a scene could not be presented "In a wood near Athens." It is a Mid-winter Night in Southern California. An ordinary, commonplace calendar night, one of many such that "quickly dream away the time." With such a winter season, and a summer time that fits it perfectly, small wonder it is that every land under the sun sends its worshipping pilgrims hither. The wonder is, that so many men stay away.

"Climate" is California's principal asset. Our eastern friends tell us the State deserves no credit for that. No. Nor does New Orleans deserve the credit of creating the Gulf of Mexico. Nor did St. Louis invent the Mississippi river. Chicago did not dam up Lake Michigan; she only built the drainage canal, which is different. There is even an old tradition that the famous Harbor was there before Boston was located, which is impossible. All these great natural advantages antedated by many ages the great cities which have grown up because of them, despite the shrewd observation of the thoughtful man who had been impressed by the fact that Providence had wisely ordained that all the great rivers should flow past the large cities. We reluctantly admit that neither the '49ers nor the Native Sons made the "glorious climate of California." Men didn't make the climate. But they made the state. Men make cities, not because of natural advantages, but in spite of natural disadvantages. Else had the east wind prevented any Boston; the swamp had vetoed Chicago; the morass had prohibited New Orleans, and the grim specter of the "Great American Desert" had forever isolated California.

It was destined to be a land wherein fact should read like romance, and all the fiction born of California genius should read tamely, beside the quiet wonders of its history. It's very name sprang from romantic dreams, for "it is taken from an old Spanish romance, called Sergas de Esplandian (Exploits of Esplandian), by Ordonez de Montalvo, translator of Amadis de Gaul, printed about 1510. California was a mythical island on the right hand of the Indies, very near the Terrestrial paradise, peopled with Amazons and Griffins." (Charles F. Lummis.) God was very good to California, then, at her christening, giving to her a name that was characteristically descriptive, especially as to geographical location, before some closet geographer should name it "North" Something, because there was a portion of the earth to the south of it, or "New" Something, because there was already in existence a country so utterly unlike it that the most distorted imagination could detect no suggestion of similarity between them. "A Good Name is to be chosen rather than great riches." Happy California! That the day of her christening should have come in the time of originality in nomenclature, before the growing world had fallen upon the evil days of naming towns and states by the simple, time-saving and brain-sparing use of carbon sheets and multiple copying presses. Christened at the fount of romance, Cold Fact smiled at the appositeness of name and description, and adopted the dream-child for his own. So he gave to her a dower of valleys in which never a flake of snow flutters down from the highest clouds, and looking down upon them, mountains that wear white crown of winter all the months through all the summer years. Deserts lower than the sea, and a mountain higher than the clouds—Death Valley, the lowest depression, and Mt. Whitney, the highest elevation in the United States. He clothed his daughter of Romance with nothing but truthful superlatives. He gave her the scantiest, sourest, most unpalatable wild fruits of her own, and made her the most bountiful step-mother of all the fruits the earth can bear. He famished her with deserts, barren and desolate, and said to her, "Here, not in the mines of gold, is your wealth." And in one year the harvest of her gold mines was a paltry $16,989,044, while the golden harvest of her farms and gardens was $131,690,-606, more than seven times as much as all her gold that year could buy. He taught her how to waste her rivers from their torrent beds, and scatter them over the land in irrigating ditches, so that the shallow river a child could ford became a stream of fertility, an oasis of blossom and fruit and shrub twenty miles wide. On every page of her unfolding history and growing greatness, he wrote down paradoxes that her writers of fiction hesitated to use, so that the guileless tenderfoot believed in "Colonel Jack Hazard," and "Truthful James," and "Bill Nye," in refined and rigidly moral gamblers, in pure-minded harlots and generous stage robbers with university degrees, but shook their heads and said, "Oh, California stories!" with pitying toleration, such as one uses when speaking of the heathen in his blindness, when told of the "Big Trees" and the Yo Semite, and eight crops of peas in one year from the same field. Even the meditative and unromantic cow, contemplatively chewing her cud of alfalfa under the great branches of the live oak, looked down with placid contempt on the strenuous efforts of the gold mines to produce sixteen millions of dollars, while in the same period, in her quiet simple life in the meadows she added twelve million dollars to the wealth of her state in milk, butter and cheese, a rivalry which is enough to make the old "49ers" turn over in their graves. The gold is only useful to buy more cows, and improved agricultural machinery. Los Angeles county is not famous for its gold mines—although one may stand on the street and buy mines as they come along, for she owns mines in nearly every district in California, Nevada, Arizona and Mexico—but it has nearly seven thousand farms, and the transmutation of farm products into minted gold is just as sure as the mining process, and requires far less blue print and promoter's eloquence.

But the climate doesn't deserve exclusive credit for all this. The climate was here in all its perfection of beauty and gentleness in 1781. And doubtless the cattle enjoyed it. For the population of California then consisted of the two classes into which the discerning cow-boy still divides the denizens of the earth—"cows and humans," putting the cows first, of course, as the more valuable and more intelligent. Los Angeles county, and all California round about it—it was all the one—was a great pasture, and the horned herds that roamed over it would have hard work to secure "honorable mention" and useful death in the "scalawag" class in any reputable stock yards of today—long bodied, longer legged, and still longer horned; fleet of foot and scant of beef—the milkless kine of Pharaoh. The only product of any value they yielded was their hide and tallow. When that was taken off, and out, there was nothing left. The people lived the simple life. The "first families" of Los Angeles, the founders to whose illustrious memory we have neglected to rear a lofty monument, are not represented by their descendants among the aristocratic loungers in the California Club, nor are they corraling the passing lion in the Friday Morning, or studying civic righteousness in Ebell. "Our Glorious Founders" were a polyglot lot, which Mr. Venus would have classified as "human warious." There were eleven families. Not a man of them could read or write. Two Spaniards there were, and both of these had Indian wives. And one of the proud Castilians, Jose de Lara, of aristocratic name, was very shortly deported from the colony for general uselessness to himself and the community. The historians tell us, however, that Jose's Castilian stock was somewhat adulterated. But Antonio Felix Villavalencio was warranted "absolutely pure." He had an Indian helpmeet; Jose Navarro, Basilio Rosas, an Indian, had mulatto wives; so had Manuel Camaro and Jose Moreno, themselves mulattos, also Luis Quintero, a negro; Jose Vanegas, Alejandro Rosas, and Pablo Rodriguez, were Indians, with Indian wives. Thus laden with humble souls and aristocratic names our Mayflower came into port September 4th, 1781, and with religious ceremonies, consisting of a mass and a salvo of musketry, our step-fathers formally founded the Pueblo de Nuestra Senora La Reina de Los Angeles, on the banks of the Rio de Porciuncula, which changed its name to Los Angeles when it went dry. The city never having passed through that process of regeneration retains its original name unto this day. It takes an earthquake of the century class to convert a California city of the first class to prohibition, and Los Angeles is not in the earthquake belt. Our forefathers possessed the true Los Angelan spirit. They built first an irrigating ditch and then they laid out town lots and acreage property, deported three of their number, one white man and two negroes for general worthlessness, wisely and thriftily confiscating their property for the common good. The remaining colonists—twenty-eight all told, including the children—went to work, erected public buildings and a church, and began to do business.

All of Los Angeles was in that little (acorn?) They weren't a people to worry—that folly comes with the higher civilization—and they watched themselves grow. In nine years the population had increased to 141; multiplied itself by five in nine years—a record-breaking challenge for succeeding generations. The city thus early established the habit of growing, which is to this day emphasized by prophetic and optimistic real estate “pobladores.” The padres were teaching the Mission Indians the arts of agriculture and architecture, and the useful trades. Los Angeles emerged from its pole huts and erected palatial structures of adobe, one story high and absolutely fire-proof. In 1800 the population was 315, the herds of horses and cattle numbered 12,500 head; wheat was $1.66 per bushel and the crop was over 8,000 bushels. “Dollar wheat” didn't get into politics that year. They paid their taxes in grain. They had a mail from Mexico once a month, but as not more than half a dozen of the citizens could read or write, there was no complaint when one or two mails missed. In 1818 two Americans became citizens of Los Angeles, Joseph Chapman of Massachusetts, and a negro named Fisher. Things moved with symptoms of "hustle." Chapman built the first mill in Southern California, and the gods of things that are to be began to grind their grist. Three years after that American mill began its tic-tac, Mexico achieved her independence. In 1822 the flag of the Empire of Mexico floated over Los Angeles and the Spanish power in America had begun the march that led to the bottom of the sea. Three years of imperial sway, and the banner of the Republic of Mexico supplanted the imperial standard, the rapid change of flags fluttering by like the decorations of coming Fiestas. Los Angeles was an agricultural community. Its manufactories at this time consisted exclusively of distilleries and wineries. These were very successful, as an election in 1826 was declared void by the governor on the ground that "the candidates were vagabonds, drunkards, and worse." Graft is not a modern disease in the body politic. Our fathers also ate wild grapes. Some time in 1820 Los Angeles was discovered by Boston, and a thriving trade in hide and tallow was established, the Boston ships bringing out assorted cargoes. The blessings of Boston baked beans did not reach the land until later, for the canning industry still slumbered in the brain of inventive man. But the Los Angelans had a base-born, sable-hued, bean of their own, upon which, knowing nothing superior, they thrived happily. The American invasion continued. About 1829 the precursor of all the signs that dot the landscape and hide the vacant lots and crown the cornices of the highest buildings, appeared—"Rice and Temple." And they were New England Yankees. Los Angeles was marching on the way of its destiny, and new comers were already dropping the "Pueblo de Nuestra Senora La Reina de" from their letter heads. Temple & Rice introduced three or four new and distinct pronunciations of the rest of the name, which are still most successfully imitated, with intricate variations, by their 200,000 successors.

If ignorance is bliss, the people were happy. But they were not unmindful of the blessings of education. In 1817 an old soldier, Maximo Pina, opened a school and taught the children enough in two years to last them through the next decade. Two years of school in forty-six would not make scholars of a community. Indeed, it would barely qualify them for writing dialect stories and "best selling books." They felt that, and in 1827 Luciano Valdez was employed at a salary of $15 per month, to teach the young idea how and whom to shoot. He struck for $30 in his second year and resigned. Fifteen dollars was the value placed upon a schoolmaster until after the American "assimilation," even in the flush times of '49. In 1850 the salary was suddenly increased to $60 per month and house rent, and the schoolmaster took his place among the plutocrats.

But during all the dearth of public schools it must be remembered that the padres were teachers at the Missions. They taught along polytechnic lines and largely on the Dotheboys hall system. When the neophyte learned to spell hide, he was sent out to tan one. And at irregular but very short intervals his own was properly tanned by the good padre on general principles. He, and the public school teacher as well, were instructors after the fashion of Saxe's "Pedagogue"—"Ye youngster's pate to stimulate, He beat ye other end." The teachers in the public school, up to 1850 were, as a rule, old soldiers, selected because of their physical strength and good fighting qualities.

With the expulsion of the Spanish power came the downfall of the Missions. The country was beginning to fill up with people—that is, here and there was a family or a man who wanted to "locate." The Missions, established under Spanish rule, had a land monopoly that would make the Standard Oil hide its diminished head when the subject of monopolies was introduced. From San Francisco to San Diego they held about all the land that was worth holding, and no settler could obtain a grant of land for his homestead, save with the consent of the nearest padres. The ranches owned by the Mission San Gabriel contained about 1,500,000 acres. And this immense tract of land never supported a population of more than 1,800 neophytes. Naturally, people on the outside clamored for a new division of the earth. The Mexican Congress decreed the secularization of the Missions and the distribution of their property in August, 1833. The great Mission holdings were divided into smaller ranches and passed into the hands of actual settlers. From that time the country improved in wealth and population more rapidly than ever before. In 1836 California experienced a throb of the Fourth of July and declared itself "a free and sovereign state," with Juan Bautista Alvarado cast for the part of George Washington, and twenty-five American hunters and trappers, under command of a Tennessean named Graham, playing the French allies. Los Angeles remained loyal to the mother country, and in the battles which followed, her heroes displayed staunch loyalty and good sprinting qualities, which latter on several occasions saved their lives. The "war" ended, rather confusedly, in the triumph of the revolutionists, the appointment of Alvarado as governor, the allegiance of California to the Home Government, and the downfall of independence. There is nothing on earth that resembles the conduct and results of the early wars in California, save the present water-rights laws. Whoever understands the one can solve the other. At 4 o'clock on the afternoon of August 13th, 1846, "manifest destiny" knocked at the gates of Los Angeles. Fremont and Stockton entered the city with 500 real soldiers and no proclamation, California was benevolently assimilated, and Joshua had added to his rightful inheritance by the simple act of "putting down his foot." Los Angeles belonged to "us," and the first "native son" in a land older than the pyramids got himself ready to be born and organize a "parlor." The men who were to make California, however, had got born some time before, and were on their way to introduce the strenuous life.

At the time of the capture of Los Angeles the white population of California was about 5,000, of whom less than 500 were Americans. Two years later a man found a grain of gold in the mud of a tail-race, and within a year thereafter that tiny magnet had drawn 42,000 people from the eastern states and all over the world to the new gold field, and California was "discovered." In ten years the population had grown to nearly 100,000. In 1860 it was 379,994. Today it is more than one and one-half millions, and the greater part of the increase has been in the south. Los Angeles, which came into the Union in 1851 with a population of 1,610, is now the 30th city in the United States, numbering 238,000 souls. In 1850, Los Angeles county included the present counties of San Bernardino, Orange and about half of Kern, and the officially recorded population was 3,530. In the rush of '49, Los Angeles county profited a little with the rest of the territory, but the development of the mines in the south, with other developments, followed that date. And in 1906 the value of "the gold that grows on trees" in Southern California citrus groves, is estimated at $30,000,000. Hides, once the great staple of the country, Southern California, added but a petty paltry $150,000 to her wealth. The value of the steer saves his hide in these days of prosperity, while "humans" pay more for a pair of boots or a suit case than the whole hide is worth. Such is the difference between hide and leather. The area of the "pueblo" has grown to be 44 square miles, and with an eye to the annexation of the entire county. Nearly 200 churches minister to the spiritual needs of the people, while the processional and migratory "religions" which howl on the streets and camp for a night on the vacant lots—of which there are very few left in Los Angeles—defy the activity of the statistician. The Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America have homes commodious, attractive and in every way most excellently appointed. The public school system of the state stands in the first rank in the Union, the census of 1900 showing five State Normal Schools, 120 High Schools, 7,119 kindergartens, primary and grammar schools; with a total of 7,706 teachers, 372,352 pupils, and $19,135,722 value of school property; two great free universities and an enrollment of one college student to every 419 of total population—a larger proportion than is reached in any other state.

The bank clearances of Los Angeles exceed those of any city west of the Rocky Mountains, San Francisco alone excepted—and at the present writing (May, 1906), San Francisco not excepted, for striking reasons. Half a century ago, Los Angeles county was a ranche—hardly that—a ranche with grazing lands, for the assessed value of all the real estate in the then enormous county was but $748,696 in 1852, and the value of improvements but $301,947. Today, sixty-one towns and cities dot the area of the smaller county, and the assessor's total valuation of the county, after equalization by the state board, for 1905, was $201,509,785.

If one knows just where to look for it, there is in Los Angeles an adobe house, there may be one or two or several others—crumbling landmarks of adobe days and adobe men. They were good houses and good men in their day. They were the best of their time and place. All honor to their memory. It should be kept green by the preservation of at least one adobe house. But the great sky-scrappers of steel and terra cotta, and reinforced concrete easily crush the sun-dried walls which sheltered the simple life. The intellectual poverty of the moneyed tenderfoot, who unable to pronounce "El Camino" insists on changing the name of the street on which he lives to the name of a way-back street on which he used to live in a way-back town, is like unto the class of people who date their letters "Troy" because they cannot spell "Skaneateles." The antiquity of a city 225 years old is not that of Baalbec, but it is sufficiently venerable to demand the reverence of these days of gallop and gulp. The destruction of the old names, memorials of the people who laid the foundations for all our present day prosperity and glory, is a profanation, like the erasure of an honored name from a tombstone. There is enough of pathos in the fact that the race which christened the city should have been so utterly dispossessed of their inheritance. It adds tragedy to the pathos when we obliterate even the names of their fathers. Despite the movement to make spelling easy for lazy illiterates, let California's native and adopted sons alike, continue to "spell hickory with a j," and grant the transplanted tenderfoot dispensation to "pronounce her as she is spelled, until he learns to say her as she is spoke."

Now, all this marvel of development was not wrought by Climate alone. This required men.

And the men of California, like its fruits and flowers, are largely adopted children. There is only one generation to the manner born. The speech of the Californian betrayeth him not, for every dialect of civilization is here. A little pure Spanish and much patois of Mexican-Indian-Spanish whisper into the Babel of today the echoes of a romantic yesterday. Aspirations and ex-aspirations from the tight little island have a right to be called native Californian so long as we sing the charms of the English rose, of which we have adopted everything save the English perfume. The "sunny land of France" speaks the language of the boulevards in her own Los Angeles colony and journal. The Basque shepherd cares for his snowy fleeces on the sheep ranges. The New England twang blends with the soft Southern accent, and a broad touch of Pennsylvania Dutch establishes the Dunkard's right to the privilege of the native born. The right amalgam is stronger than the virgin metal, and every state in the Union has poured its right and due proportion into the blend that we call California. Russia sent her children here—or rather they came without being sent—runaway children, very much against the paternal will, and they brought the strength and hope and liberty-loving spirit that the mother country now so sorely needs, and which the kinder step-mother so gladly accepts as her own. Not only the orient but the occident—the nations who dwell where the East and West join—China and Japan, are among us if not of us. Travelers tell us of the vivid panorama of varied humanity that streams past “Shephard’s” in Cairo. You will touch elbows with a greater variety of men in the streets of Los Angeles. Only, the picturesqueness is lacking. The people have become amalgamated. They dress like Christians. At least, they dress like the rest of us.

The immigrants who have made modern Los Angeles were so unlike the ordinary conception of immigrants that a new name had to be applied to them, and they are called “tourists.” Not theirs the toilsome journey across the continent or around the storm-washed Horn. Not for them the daily trek and the nightly camp in the midst of alarms and cactus, Indians, grizzlies, and rattlers; not theirs the weary pilgrimage through the alkali lakes and the desert dust, with the complaining wheels shrieking their anguish to the sun-burned and wind-dried axle; the dying cattle and the long and repeated hours and days of despair and fear. About 8,000 came to Los Angeles in that manner in the decade of 1850 and '60. The rest of them waited for the completion of the transcontinental railways and came with no one to molest them save the train-robber and no one to make them afraid but the porter. In the ten years following the breaking out of the Civil war 4,000 came. Between 1870 and 1880, 10,000 home-seekers came by the easy way of the rail. The ten years following saw 70,000 added to the city's population, and the same number in the next decade.

Our immigrants came not to hew down the forests or dike out the sea. They came prepared to buy their homes; they came from homes of comfort to make homes still more comfortable. They were not flying from persecution or tyranny in the eastern states; they were not, as a rule, driven here by stress and pinch of poverty. They did not have to come. They wanted to. True, some of them came with a diminished capitalization of health, but even then they came because they wanted to increase their vital holdings. Men came here not to be made by the country, but to help make the city, county and state. The east sent to California her best, and California made them better. The work of betterment was mutual. Southern California was moulded by these immigrants of education, thrift, and morality. It was never the California of Bret Harte, of refined stage robbers, chaste and sensitive women of the street and camp, and high-minded and honest blacklegs. The newcomers builded churches, public schools, libraries, jails and other concomitants of a high and progressive civilization. It was not a drunken, riotous California. Prohibition became popular. One of the largest and most beautiful cities in Los Angeles county, the most prosperous outside the great county capital, was founded as a temperance town and has not had a saloon within its limits for the past twenty-five years. There are half a score prohibition towns now in the county, and the great city of Los Angeles restricting the number of saloons to 200, has fewer of them in proportion to its population than any other city of its size in the United States. Not "wide-openness," but temperance, morality and industry, with an unmeasured faith in the country itself, have been the great elements in the prosperity of Los Angeles county, and the publishers take pleasure in presenting to the community of the county a few of the men who have helped to build greater, and later, and better Los Angeles and its county.
